

I have received once again information about Indiana's "do not call" list being under attack. I work for a living and I can understand the need for people to have a job and make a living. What I do not understand is why my private phone line should be a welcome mat for any 2 bit business to disturb me. I work second shift although I realize that I am not on the most common "normal shift". I do feel that I should have a right to sleep and I should have a right to having what little family time I have to be undisturbed.

I also believe I should have a right to join a list of people who have voiced there opinions that "enough is enough". I as everyone else on the Indiana's "Do not call list" Have been fed up and realize that we have a right to live in our homes and not be disturbed by anyone who wants to sell a magazine subscription, change long distant carriers , or install siding and windows. As far as banks go if I decide I need to open an account I will look into a banks system and decide where I want to bank.

Sure I could leave my phone "off the hook" but as the person paying the phone bill I should have the peace of mind knowing I don't need to put my family in a bind when they need something or I can have peace of mind knowing that if for some reason my wife or children are in an accident that the proper authorities can get in touch with me as quickly as possible.

Besides most companies selling stuff over the phone are ripping people off. If they have such an outstanding product or such an outstanding deal they can advertise like most reputable companies and sell their products to people who are not asleep.
